Description

The gargantuan scale of economic recovery packages needed in response to the COVID-19 crisis will shape economies and political decision making for at least the next decade. But the COVID-19 crisis comes on top of a climate and environmental crisis that demands its own gargantuan scale of action. Amidst the many parallels between them, these crises powerfully illustrate the need for global coordination in the face of systemic global risks.

At this London Climate Action Week event, E3G is bringing together key stakeholders in the calls for sustainable and climate-safe economic recoveries from the COVID-19 crisis to design an international agenda that can translate these calls into coordinated global and national action. Speakers have been invited from the IEA and IMF whose most recent report will set out a detailed plan for a sustainable recovery, academia, civil society, and key governments hosting crucial multilateral fora over the next 18 months.

How can UK green finance policies support green and resilient economic recovery?

Date: July 2nd | 11:00-12:30 BST

Host: E3G and Green Finance Institute

Audience: Open

Key Contact: Chris Dixon O'Mara, chris.dixonomara@e3g.org

LCAW theme: Green investment for economic recovery

Description

The UK has a strong history of leading on green and sustainable finance in both the domestic and international spheres. It now has a unique opportunity to further this leadership by implementing financial reforms which address the economic challenges of COVID-19 and climate change, both at national level and through its international leadership roles in 2021. In extraordinary times the UK has an extraordinary opportunity. This event will explore how the UK can integrate climate change into its own economic recovery strategy and set out a financial plan to underpin its net-zero target, enabling finance to be channelled at scale to the new industries and infrastructure that are required for future UK prosperity.

Description

The COVID-19 pandemic has brought concerns about resilience to the fore in an unprecedented way. The pandemic has laid bare the vulnerability of health systems and economies, substantiating concerns about resilience more broadly to external shocks. Given the immense losses that could be avoided by delivering resilience, policymakers must seek prioritisation of resilience across different dimensions, including: climate, health, development, investment, peace and security. This event will articulate the importance of resilience across agendas, and the need for ambitious public policy commitments on climate adaptation and resilience in the near term, exploring what can be exploring what can be done on in the run-up to COP26, with a view to setting up action over the course of this decade.
